

Healing the Heart of Croatia

Joseph Kerrigan and William Novick, M.D.

A miracle of hope in war-torn Croatia. A surgeon's promise, a priest's dedication, a community's generosity.

In the midst of the ethnic violence tearing apart the former Yugoslavia, hundreds of children with congenital heart disease have been able to receive treatment not available in their war-torn countries. This miracle has been spearheaded in the U.S. by the authors -- a pediatric heart surgeon who heads the medical team here and abroad and the priest who mobilized the community of Memphis to fund and support the effort. How this miracle happened is told through the stories of twelve of these children. Here are narratives of faith, healing, and mission that reveal humanity's common struggle against suffering and death.
